INTRODUCTION

In 1985 I edited and published 'Monthly Repository 1806-1832: Index to and Synopsis of the Obituaries'. This small volume was well received by both Unitarian researchers and family historians. It contained upwards of 1500 obituaries and I was encouraged to undertake the larger task of extracting those in the other Unitarian journals of the period 1794 to 1850. Before 1794 there were no specifically Unitarian periodicals which published obituaries, and after 1850 the task is too massive to contemplate.

It has to be admitted that the coverage of this present volume is incomplete. The 'Inquirer' commenced publication in July 1842, (and continues to this day as the oldest dissenting newspaper) and included obituaries which were paid for from the start. This obviously increased their number considerably. Most were just basic statements of the name and age of the deceased and when and where the death took place. It was a clear break with the tradition of other Unitarian journals as there is no evidence to suggest that previously the often very long and detailed obituaries were paid for by members of the family. They were seen to be a service to the readership both to maintain their interest in Unitarianism as well as a laudatory record of people who had served their churches well. In these circumstances what went in was very much up to the editor, his likes and dislikes and concentration on the particular part of the country he knew best. For example the 'Christian Reformer' under Robert Aspland had many Hackney references; George Harris's 'Christian Pioneer' was replete with obituaries from Liverpool and later, from Scotland; and the General Baptist journals with those for Kent and Sussex. These area loyalties mean that coverage is extensive in some places but very sketchy in others. The advent of the 'Inquirer' changed this situation where payment determined insertion, except for the occasional eulogy which appeared in the text rather than the advert pages. There are some obvious advantages for us today in this approach especially for family historians but it did mean a different way of looking at obituaries. For example few of the poor are likely to have appeared. Obituaries from Irish Non-Subscribing Presbyterian and Unitarian journals have also not been included though obituaries of many Irish people appear in this volume. In most cases, but not all, the area in London where deaths took place has not been shown except where there are extensive references, eg Hackney.

What appears here is often only the barest of bones of the full text. Some contained little more than is set down in the transcription whilst others give copious references and family allusions. It is essential to go to the original to find out whether there is a feast of information in store for you; it is also wise to check my facts in cases of doubt as errors could have crept into the transcription though I hope not many. I wish to thank Miss Julie Savage for her smooth and accurate typing of my transcript.

Nonconformist obituaries in this period can be a delight for the modern reader, though some may find them depressing. They have not the archness and sentimentality of those of the later Victorian period. Their length and candour are a boon for the researcher, though some of them are maddeningly deficient in important facts. National and local newspapers before 1850 did not often include obituaries except for the great and good. Nonconformists believed strongly in pietas and so some degree of ancestor worship is present, especially if some disadvantage or suffering had been experienced at the hands of the representatives of the Church of England. However in order to fill up space you will find the editors included entries for Bishops and often quite minor Anglican clergy taken from national newspapers. There was understandably a little jealousy and snobbish regard for the high ecclesiastics of the socially elevated church. Roman Catholics get many mentions especially in the 'Christian Reflector'. Historical accounts of the long dead also appear in some journals, sometimes as a filler, taken in the main from funeral sermons. Most of these have been included in this index as these lives may not have been transcribed elsewhere.

There is some duplication amongst the journals but not as much as might be expected. Some took material published in the 'Christian Reformer' and nearly all borrowed from the 'Monthly Repository', a fact which is sometimes acknowledged; these acknowledged lifts from other Unitarian journals have not been included. All took extensively from national newspapers and journals. However it should not be assumed that the obituary for a particular person is the same in all of the journals; they are not, especially if a particular editor was a friend (or enemy) of the deceased. The extent, nature and content of the obituary depended very much on whether someone was willing to write it. It also depended on the editor's view of the theological position of the deceased and the place and stand they took on the key Unitarian issues of the day.

Thus who was included could be very much a hit and miss affair, but to some extent this has always been the case with obituaries appearing in journals with restricted space available. In the nearly 2,500 obituaries appearing here there are many more men than women and a concentration of obituaries of ministers and their relations. It is not possible to forecast who will be recorded; sometimes the very poor were included if they 'died well', ie affirming the Unitarian faith and not that of orthodox Christianity, and the rich under the system of free obituaries did not always get a mention. However if someone was active in one of the former Presbyterian churches they are likely to get an entry in the 'Christian Reformer', whilst the generally poorer General Baptists had their own journals in the 19th century which included items on their members. Care should be taken with the age recorded here; 67th year for example has been taken to mean aged 66 at death but external evidences show that this was not always the case.

All the journals from which these extractions were made are to be found at Dr Williams' Library in London. There are also holdings at the British Library as well as in Manchester College Oxford (MCO) and the Unitarian College Manchester Library (now located in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester). Other Unitarian periodicals of the period have been checked but do not contain relevant obituary material. If you require background on either the journals or their editors the best general survey is to be found in H McLachlan, 'The Unitarian Movement in The Religious Life of England', London, 1934.

An index of the vast majority of obituaries, including those of the 'Inquirer', that appeared in Unitarian periodicals from the 1790s to the 1970s can be found in the library of MCO. Recorded on a card system by Mrs Betty Johnson, it gives only the name of the deceased and the journal reference. Some of the smaller periodicals mentioned here are not included in the Johnson index. Requests for information from the MCO index should be sent by post to the Librarian enclosing a stamped addressed envelope. Those who want a more complete picture of the obituaries of the period should consult my Index to the Monthly Repository Obituaries.

Obituaries by their very nature do not make cheerful reading and their authors never intended that they should do so. However we can be excused if we find some unintentional humour in some of them. For example in the 'Universal Theological Magazine' in 1804, Miss E Mercer was shown as 'carried off at the interesting age of 22', and William Savory in 1805 'died on 19 June, of a dangerous illness'. Extracts from obituaries prepared on a systematic basis can never provide this human touch or give the flavour of loss and bereavement which is all too clear in so many of them. The sheer number of deaths of children and young people makes us realise how far the western world has changed in this respect. However these obituaries show more than this; they provide a glimpse of a past age - earnest, solemn, and very theologically committed. Reading a selection can be recommended if you want to obtain a picture of social life in pre-Victorian Britain.
